Pojoaque High teacher arrested

The New Mexican | Posted: Wednesday, May 1, 2013 7:00 am

Santa Fe County Sheriff's deputies have arrested a 31-year-old Pojoaque High School teacher who is accused of coercing a male teen into sex acts.

Teacher Jennifer Vigil, 31, is being charged with two counts of criminal sexual penetration after the teen said that she pressured him into letting her perform oral sex on him one day after school in mid-March. According to magistrate court records, the student, who was in Vigil's Horticulture class, took cell-phone photographs of Vigil as she performed the sex act.

Vigil told sheriff's detectives that the student requested oral sex, which then led to sexual intercourse between the two one day in early April and that he returned to her again in mid-April with a similar request, which she granted. She said the sexual relations were consensual.

Vigil is currently being held at the Santa Fe County Detention Center pending an arraignment hearing.

A 31-year-old teacher accused of having sex with a student in her Pojoaque Valley High School classroom was arraigned Wednesday on felony charges.

Jennifer Vigil faces two counts of criminal sexual penetration of the teen, who told police that she pressured him into letting her perform oral sex on him in March, and then into having sexual intercourse twice in April.

Authorities said Vigil admitted to having sex with the student on school grounds but said that the sex was consensual and that the student had repeatedly sought sexual favors.

Maj. Ken Johnson of the Santa Fe County Sheriff's Office said that even though the student is 18 and may have consented to sexual acts, the acts themselves are still illegal.

"In her position as a teacher, she's an authority figure," Johnson said. "For her to engage in any sexual activity with a student, whether they be 18 or not, is against the law."

A criminal complaint says Vigil told investigators that "she was aware she had authority over [the student] because she was his teacher" but again insisted that the sexual acts were consensual.

Johnson said school officials reported the alleged incidents to police after "rumors" spread throughout the school.

At about 4 p.m. Tuesday, members of the school's security staff questioned the student about the rumors and then called police, Johnson said. The student and the teacher on Tuesday evening each agreed to be questioned by deputies at the Santa Fe County Sheriff's Office.

The criminal complaint says the student, who was in Vigil's horticulture class, told investigators that he went into her classroom after school on March 22 to turn in an assignment. The student told officers that Vigil locked the door behind him and told him, "You're not leaving until I get something from you," according to court documents.

The student told officers that Vigil mentioned that she was no longer intimate with her husband and told him, "If you help me out, I'll help you out."

Vigil then allegedly performed oral sex on the student, who used a cellphone camera to take a picture of her as she performed the sex act, the complaint states. The student, however, maintained to investigators that the sex act was performed against his will.

The complaint says deputies were able to identify Vigil from the photo provided to investigators.

After she was read her Miranda rights, Vigil told investigators that she had been teaching the student since he started at the school four years earlier. Vigil told officers of only two incidents involving herself and the student, documents state. She admitted to having sexual intercourse with the student in her classroom on April 2 and April 12, according to the documents, then stopped and asked to have an attorney present for further questioning.

Vigil told Santa Fe County Magistrate Judge George Anaya Jr. at her arraignment Wednesday that she was seeking a private attorney. The judge set her bond at $25,000.

Pojoaque Schools Human Resources Director Angela Lobato said Wednesday that Vigil had been a full-time teacher at the high school for eight years in various disciplines. Lobato said Vigil has been placed on paid administrative leave pending the outcome of the criminal case.

"We take these allegations seriously and will cooperate with all investigations," Lobato said.
